Washington Whispers

The White House is furious at Leon Jaworski, special counsel to the House Ethics Committee, who they believe was responsible for leaks indicating that cryptologists of the supersecret National Security Agency had broken South Korea's diplomatic code. Presidential aides fear disclosure of the code breaking will harm relations between Washington and Seoul. Aides of Jaworski vehemently deny the White House charge.

Western intelligence officials are picking up reports that many Cuban Army officers in Africa are unhappy over Fidel Castro's intervention on that continent and may become a source of trouble for the Cuban leader when they return home.
